About FJI

Founded in 1978, the Florida Justice Institute is a nonprofit civil rights legal organization that uses impact litigation and advocacy to improve the lives of Florida’s poor and disenfranchised residents, while focusing on criminal justice reform, homelessness & poverty, disability access, and other civil rights issues. We do this by bringing targeted and systemic civil rights litigation to achieve widespread and lasting change. We investigate through partnerships with advocacy groups and directly impacted people, and use strategic, creative, and client-centered litigation to end systems of oppression and improve living conditions across the state of Florida. Through a combination of class action and individual cases, we aim to leverage our resources so that change continues beyond our lawsuits. FJI takes a multi-pronged approach to reform, focusing on litigation, advocacy, and media relations, while centering the voices of clients and directly impacted people. We work collaboratively with other organizations and law firms to extend our reach.

FJI has only had two Executive Directors in its history. We have a current staff of six (including three attorneys, two paralegals, one office manager, plus various interns), a budget of approximately $1.3 million, and significant reserves. We are a collegial and collaborative office with deep ties to the legal and client communities we serve.
